About a year and a half ago, a communication entitled "Joe Smiley and his Jumping Frog," with the hitherto unknown signature of "Mark Twain," appeared in The Saturday Press of this city. The name, though new was not remarkable, but the style of the letter was so singularly fresh, original, and full of character as to attract prompt and universal attention among the readers of light humorous literature. Mark Twain was immediately entered as a candidate for high position among writers of his class, and passages from his first contribution to the metropolitan press became proverbs in the mouths of his admirers. No reputation was ever more of his admirers. No reputation was ever more rapidly won. The only doubt appeared to be whether he could satisfactorily sustain it. Subsequent productions, however—most of them reproduced from California periodicals—confirmed the good opinion so suddenly vouchsafed him, and abundantly vindicated the applause with which his first essay had been received. In his case, as in that of many other American humorous writers, it was only the first step that cost. Since that time he has walked easily—let us hope not too easily—over his epecial course.

His writings being comparatively new to the public, and his position having been so recently established, it might perhaps, have been doubted whether his name, would at present be sufficient to attract an lic, and his position having occur so retently stated is hished, it might perhaps, have been doubted whether his name, would at present be sufficient to attract an audience of any magnitude to witness his debut as a lecturer. But the proof of the general good-will in which he is already held was manifested last Monday evening by his brilliant reception at the Cooper Institute. The hall was crowded beyond all expectation. Not a seat was vacant, and the aisles were filled with attentive listeners. The chance offering of "The Jumping Frog." carelessly cast, 18 months ago, upon the Atlantic waters, returned to him in the most agreeable form which a young aspirant for popular farce could desire. The wind that was sowed with probably very little calculation as to its effect upon its future prospects, now enables him to reap quite a respectable tempest of encouragement and cordiality. His greeting was such as to inspire the utmost case and confidence, and it is pleasant to add that his performance in every way justified the favor bestowed upon him. and it is pleasant to add that his performance in every way justified the favor bestowed upon him. No other lecturer, of course excepting Artemus Ward, has so thoroughly succeeded in exciting the mirth-ful curiosity, and compelling the laughter of his ful curiosity, and compelling the laughter of his hearers.

The subject of his address "The Sandwich Islands," was treated mainly from a comic stand-point, although scraps of practical information and occasional pleturesque descriptions of scenery and natural phenomena peculiar to that region were liberally interspersed. The scheme of the lecturer appeared to be to employ the various facts he had gathered as bases upon which to build fanciful illustrations of character, which were furthermore embellished with a multitude of fantastic anecdotes and personal reminiscences. The frequent incongruities of the narration—evidently intentional—made it all the more diverting, and the artifice of its partial incoherence was so The frequent incongruities of the narration—evidently intentional—made it all the more diverting, and the artifice of its partial incoherence was so cleverly contrived as to intensify the amusement of the audience, while leaving them for the most part in ignorance of the means employed. As to the manner of the speaker, it is difficult to write explicitly. It was certainly peculiar and original. Perhaps no better idea of it could be conveyed than by saying it is in almost every respect the exact opposite to that of the late Artemus Ward. It suited that admirable lecturer's humor to exhibit a nervous quickness and a vivacity which always communicated itself to those who surrounded him, and his best "points" were made by the droll affectation of complete unconsciousness with which he uttered the most telling jests. Mark Twain's delivery, on the other hand, is deliberate and measured to the last degree. He lonnges comfortably around his platform, seldom referring to notes, and seeks to establish a sort of button-hole relationship with his audience at the earliest possible moment. He is even willing to exchange confidences of the most literal nature. Having made an accidental error in figures, last Monday evening, at which there was great laughter, he paused and requested to be incral nature. Having made an accidental error in figures, last Monday evening, at which there was great laughter, he paused and requested to be informed "what he had said," and was indisposed to proceed until his curiosity should be gratified. Instead of manifesting indifference to his own good jokes, he appears to relish them as heartily as anybody—a characteristic, by the bye, which also belongs to the most eminent "reader" now known to the British public. The only obvious preconcerted "effect" which he employs is a momentary hesitation or break in his narration before touching the climax of an anecdote or a witticism. But his style is his own, and needs to be seen to be understood. A second opportunity for this, we learn, is presently to be afforded, to which, when it approaches, we shall invite particular attention.

THE DRAMA. -Excess of news and of important political matter has recently compelled the omission of some of our no tices of the theaters, city amusements, and other light topics. Thus, for example, we have delayed till new to record the production, at the Broadway Theater, of a new Irish drama, called "The Shamrock." The performance of this drama has signalized the brief engagement at the Broadway Theater, which Mr. and Mrs. Barney Williams will bring to a close to-night. The piece is written in proce, and comprised in three acts. In the language there is no conspicuous merif. Its author—whose name is not announced—appears to have but an indefinite idea of the art so carried in the comprehensive in the is not announced—appears to have but an indefinite idea of the art, so essential in dramatic writing, of fitting dialogue to character and circumstances, so that the one shall flow naturally out of the combination of the other two. In the plot there is more merit; but even this is weak. It possesses, however, that sort of interest which attaches to certain novels—such, for instance, as "The Count of Monte Christo"—which one reads through only for the purpose of ascertaining how they will "turn out." The characters are commonplace and hackneyed, and so, for the most part, are the incidents, Altogether, the drama hat be briefly and fairly described as a fice but not very striking arrangement of old materials. It opposes the haughty aristocrat and the oppressed peasant, and shows us—once more—the heroic young Irishman, outlawed and in peril, attended by the attached servant, whose back is humped, pursued by the red-conts, and protected by the folly more—the heroic young Irishman, outlawed and in peril, attended by the attached servant, whose back is humped, pursued by the red-coats, and protected by the joily Irishmap. If does not omit the black-thorn endgel, nor tile black bottle of whisky. Combining these old materials with others equally well worn, the author of "The Shamrock" makes provision for an exciting scene, and a strong stage-effect, at the end of his second act. This effect consists in the fall of a woman and her infant child, from a high bridge—which breaks beneath her tread—into a deep and dangerous water. The bridge has been cut and arranged for a different sort of a catastrophe, by the Irish outlaws fleeing from the red-coats. The woman and child are, of course, rescued by the jovial Irish pessant, who nobly plunges in, accounted as he is. With the sentimental portion of the play there is no temptation to deal. It is medicerity itself. Two pairs of lovers are led through a series of impracticable woes, and made happy at last. On the whole, the unknown author of "The Shamrock" cannot be complimented on having made a valuable addition to the Irish drama. Plays of this kind are far too numerous already. It is to be noted, though, that whatever Mr. Barney Williams produces is sure to meet, for his sake, with a due recognition from popular favor. "The Shamrock" displays Mr. Williams in a familiar and characteristic attitude. Pat Mattoy is the friend of virtue, is fond of fighting, of whisky, and of the gurls, sings a song on the least provocation, defies and outwits and badgers the aristocracy, and stands by his name that the actor assumes in this drams, and Pat is the friend of virtue, is fond of fighting, of whisky, and of the guits, sings a song on the least provocation, defies and outwits and badgers the aristocracy, and stands by his friends like a trump. What can be more delightful? We can, however, recall Mr. Williams in parsonations of the same sort, in other and better plays than this one. "The Shamrock" has given but a new setting to the peculiar gem of his humor, the luster whereof is the same as ever. Mrs. Williams, too, appears, as of old, in the character of the sakey, loveable Irish peasant girl, who aids Pat in all his victaous acts, abets him in mischief, and marries him at last. In the production of "The Shamrock," at the Broadway Theater, considerable care has been expended on the scenery. The stage-effect, to which we have alluded, is effectively made. The acting, in many of the subordinate parts—and all are subordinate to Pat and Maggie—is remarkable for violence rather than discretion. One scene, in particular—that of the attempted arrest of Charics O'Hara, in act first—impresses the spectator as a protracted howl. Bellowing, we suggest, is not acting. Miss Colla Logan is the best of the minor players—her personation of Ereleen O'Hara being delicate and feminine. Reverting, for a finil remark, to the construction of the drama, we note with gladness that it does not refer to the Rebelloh of "38. The scene is laid partly in Galway, Ireland, and partly in England, and the time is 1776.

tim, appeared, st Barnum's Museum, in "The Green Mountain Boy," "The Yankee Duellist," and, "The Octocoon." Dramatic art gains little, if anything, from this actor's labors. The Yankee, even when successfully transplanted to the stage, "is not so estimable, profitable neither" as his delineators appear to fancy. Perhaps we should not state the case too strongly, were we to say that he is an intolerable hore. But Mr. Locke does not always succeed in reproducing the Yankee of real life. His portrait is too generally an exaggeration of the coarse external peculiarities, and the vulgar attributes of shrewders, unconscious impudence, good-natured boorishness, etc., etc., with which stage-custom has invested the Yankee, But we need not again traverse this familiar ground of criticism. Mr. Locke's latest personalions are not unaterially unlike their predecessers. Seeing him once, you see him always. There is an occasional flavor of unature in what he does, but there is also a strongly preponderating flavor of broad haree. The cleverness of the actor, within a limited scope, is positive and is effective. He makes a good namy people laugh, who would be folind as death to the delicate at of Warren or Jeffersen. It has been very truly remarked that every man has his audience. Mr. Locke's last was was rather lineared. coon." Dramatic art gains little, if anything, from this bilind as death to the delicate art of Warren or Jefferson. It has been very truly remarked that every man has his audience. Mr. Locke's, last week, was rather limited, in point of numbers, because of the bad weather, and the moving aprirt of May-Day, which have afflicted all the places of public entertainment; but this week the attendance has improved. In respect to the plays in which Yakiwe Locke appears, we can but remark that they indicate a surprising mental sterility on the part of the literary interpreters of Yankee life and character. The moving Panorsum of the Nile is still on exhibition at the Museum, and is well worthy of a visit. In other respects the Museum continues to offer its usual attractions.

-The pantomime of "Little Boy Blue," which has for a mouth past, attracted large audiences to the Bowery Theater, is about to be withdrawn. After the present Theater, is about to be witherawn. After the present week, Mr. Fox's term of management coming to an end, "Lattle Boy Blue" will "blow his horn" in other parts of the country. As this pantonime is exceedingly amusing, particularly to young people, we once more direct to it his attention of our readers. Though of late years the Bowery Theater has done no service whatever to the drawn; it has certainly—since Mr. Fox began to produce outcoming—done good service to the cause of mirth; and we, therefore, trust that the season will close in brilliant prosperity. Innocent mirth is at all times a blessing.

We trust that they will say good bye to a crowd of friends. -The usual afternoon performance at Barnum's Museum should not be overlooked by persons intent on being amused. "The Octoroon" will be acted, with Yan-kee Looke as Salem Scudder.

A fatal case of hydrophobia which was reported at Hobart Town, Australia, in February, is believed to be the first case that ever occurred South of the equator. The London Daily Telegraph has an editorial on the new Court-House swindle in this City, which it declares far exceeds in atrocity anything known in England.

Mr. Harford Mellor, an antiquarian, asserts that he has discovered the remains of King Alfred, which have now been burled 966 years. Mr. Mellor feels confident that the royal remains are now lying in the gilt mortuary over the chancel of Hyde parish church, and the two leaden plates found, with the King's name upon them, are now in the hands of the vicar, Mr. Williams.

The Rithalists are unpopular in some parts of England. On Good Friday the Rev. James Hunt, incumbent of a parish near Bridgewater, entered the church bearing in his hand a large wooden cross and followed by the bell-ringer and a woman named Cottey, who has been for some time past the sole member of his congregation. A molo of about 50 persons, including a number of children dressed out with colored paper, soon burst into the church, pelted the reverend gentleman with eggs, beat the woman, Cottey, and tore her clothes to rags, and regaled themselves with tobacco and cuder. Mr. Hunt was shally driven to a neighboring house for shelter.

At a fête given in Paris by Marchal Niel in Easter week, one of the large saloons was transformed into a garden in the midst of which a cascade of real water fell from a rock, and, by the effect of green electric fire, seemed to pour down showers of emeralds into a basin beneath. Beyond this a mysterious passage led to an Arab tent, ornamented with magnificent draperica. A correspondent of a Philadelphia paper describes the Paris Exposition building as follows: Take a round gingerbread with a hele in the middle. The hele represents a garden. Around the hole describe, with a knife, eight or 10 circles, each of these is an aisle running quite round the Exhibition. Across these concentric circles draw, from the hole to the circumference of your gingerbread, 30 or 40 straight lines or radii. These separate the nations. Now, if you want to look at machinery, being a machinist yourself, begin with the great outer ring or circle, and you will pass, in their order, the machineries of every nation. The second interior ring is devoted entirely to furniture. Go round it and you can study the upholstery of mankind. The third ring is devoted to clothing. Follow this round and all the fashions of the world and the wearers will be demonstrated.

THE "TRAPP CASE"-TRAPP FOUND GUILTY AND RE-MANDED FOR SENTENCE. United States agt. John H. Trapp.

MANDED FOR SENTENCE.

United States agt John H. Trapp.

The facts in this case have been frequently reported. The defendant is a lawyer in this city, and was, at one time, a somewhat noted Democratic pointician in the Thirteenth Ward. He was at one time a law partner of John Grahum; has been a School Commissioner, and came within an acc of being elected to a judicial position. He has at various times been involved in broils, having at one time shot Thomas H. Ferris, a noted politician of the Tenth Ward, at the Sauk Coffee House, in Grandest, and, at onother time, at the same place, shot another person; in the latter case escaping from the premises by jumping from a third-story window, and slighting on a shed, escaping with a sprained ankle. Both these cases were compromised through the influence of politicians, and Trapp got off scot free. In the present case, or rather cases, he is charged in one indictment with defrauding the United States, by means of forgery out of back pay and bounty money due one Francis Priest, and with similarly defrauding the United States out of back pay and bounty money due to one John Connington. The indictments, for the purpose of saving time and expense, were, on motion of the District-Attorney, consolidated into one; the separate indictments being considered as counts in one indictment. The trial commenced on Wednesday and was finished yesterday.

The evidence for the prosecution was overwhelming; showing conclusively that defendant had obtained the money in both cases without the required signatures of the respective-parties, and had, during the period of a year after he so obtained it, denied having received it.

The defense was based mainly on technical objections to the indictments, and on assumptions, not proven, that all the money that the claimant was entitled to in the Priest case had been paid over by Trapp, and that, in the Connington case, Connington had himself signed the Priest case had been paid over by Trapp, and that, in the Connington case, Connington had himself papers.

The unry after a brief absence, brought in a verdict of guilty on both counts of the indictment, and the prisoner was remanded for sentence.

He had been held to bail on these charges in the amount of $5,000, but his bondsman, for reasons satisfactory to himself, canceled his bond by surrendering the defendant some time ago.

This was an action brought by the plaintiff, who is a manufacturer of jewelry in this city, to recover $5,000, the value of certain jewelry consigned to defendant, who is a wholessie dealer in jewelry in New-Orleans. The goods were sent to defendant in September and December. 1860, to be sold on commission. Before an accounting between the parties the war broke out, and $1,000 worth of the goods was sold in New-Orleans and payment received by defendant in Confederate money. The balance of the goods were sent to Mexico in charge of one-Lucius Church, to be disposed of by him. Church alleges that he was waylaid and robbed of it. A suit is now brought by the plaintiff to recover the full value of the jewelry.

The defendant professed a willingness to pay over the money received by him for the goods which were sold in New-Orleans; that is, the Confederate scrip, but plaintiff refused to accept it. In regard to balance covering the stolen goods, he alleges that he took all possible precautions to protect the interest of his principal; that if the goods had remained in New-Orleans, they would have been confiscated by the Rebei authorities as the property of Northern merchants, and that he was therefore not liable. In addition to this, he alleged that he had special permission from the defendant to send the goods to Mexico in charge of an agent to be selected by him, but he failed to show this by proof. Verdict for the plaintiff for the full amount claimed.

Money, though still in good supply, is more active, and less is said of cheap rates. On call the rates are 526, with a good deal at 7 on ordinary collaterals. Commercial bills sell at 6 471 for first, and 849 for second grade. As the year wears on and the compound notes mature and are replaced by gold-bearing bonds, money cannot be expected to be much cheaper, but the reverse. The present rates are as low as can be reasonably expected, and the next change will be upward. Sterling bills are firmer. We quote: London, 60 days, 1092@1091; sight, 1101; Paris, long, 5.132@5.121; short, 5.11 @5.10; Antwerp, 5.17 @5.15; Swiss, 5.17 @ 5.15; Hamburg, 364@364; Amsterdam, 414@414; Frankfort, 411@411; Bremen, 791; Berlin, 721.

THE FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS OF THE CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY, now offered for sale, are issued under a First Mortgage upon that portion of their road which lies in the State of California, extending from Sacramento to the State Line. This is considered THE MOST VALUABLE AND REMUNERATIVE LINK of the GREAT NATIONAL ROUTE TO THE PACIFIC, and the First Mortgage Bonds secured upon it possess peculiar features of safety and profit.

First: This portion of the road runs through the heart of California, and connects Sacramento with the extensive mining regions of Nevada, which must draw their supplies from the Pacific Coast over this road, and which have paid as high as $13,000,000, in gold, for transportation in a single year. Thus the LOCAL TRADE OF THIS POR-TION OF THE ROUTE MUST BE IMMENSE INDEPENDENTLY OF THE THROUGH CONNECTION WITH THE EAST.

Second: The most expensive portion of the road, over the Sierra Nevada, is already built, equipped, and running, and the NET EARNINGS of the completed portion (94 miles) ARE LARGELY IN EXCESS OF THE INTEREST ON ALL THE FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS WHICH THE COMPANY CAN ISSUE UPON 150 MILES.

Third: The mortgage is made and recorded under the laws of the State of California, where specie payment has never been suspended, and by the laws of that State and the authority of Congress the Company's contract to pay the principal and interest of their Bonds in gold is LE-GALLY BINDING.

Fourth: The revenues of the Company are received in gold, and their rates for transportation of passengers and freight are three times those of Eastern roads, so that their OPERATING EXPENSES ARE LESS THAN 25 PER CENT OF THE GROSS EARNINGS.

Fifth: The amount of the Bonds is less than one-third the cost and value of the property pledged for their redemption—the United States Government having ad-vanced an equal amount to aid the construction of the road, and relinquished the first lien upon the whole in road, and relinquished the first lien upon the whole in favor of these first mortgage bonds.

The bonds bear interest at the rate of six percent—principal and interest payable in gold in the City of New-York—and are offered at 25 percent and accured interest from January I, in currency. At the average rate of gold for the past year, they pay over $\frac{1}{2}$ percent upon the investment.

OR LIVING EXPENSES IN NEW-YORK.

FRIDAY, May 10, 1867.

Notwithstanding the cold, backward season, strawbernes have made their appearance in Daylot, though from a more Southern clime. A few hot-house berries have been on sale at the Broadway fancy fruit stores for several weeks, but now we have out-door fruit from No. 10/18.

Va. It was in fair order and sold, with hulls on, at $2.50

203 per quart box. Among fish we have the addition of se4 bass, weak fish, and a few fresh mackerel, which completes the new products for the week. Butter is not plenty just now, and dealers are asking 253c, per pound advance on fine new. Eggs are in full supply, and continue cheaper than meat. Most dealers give 13 for 25c. Shad are plenty and cheap in comparison with many other things. Flour continues to advance, a choice article of St. Louis selling at $210 $22 per barrel. Something quite common can atili be bought at $16. Meats are firm, and some of the butcher's have advanced the price of fine cuts of beef. Spring lambs have been soid as high as $12 per carcass. Poultry is still held at high figures. Asparagus, green peas, spinnel, leituee, and other freshgrown new vegetables are gradually working down, but more sun is wanted to bring them forward freely. Norfolk peas are looked for next week, and new cabbages from the South will soon take the place of the old which have just passed out of market. We quote:
